SCHOOL TRENDS

The productivity push in schools 110

New educational concepts are threatening to make many "modern" schools obsolete. How can communities plan for a future still not clear?

Friendlier architecture, higher grades 116

A pleasant place for learning grows from California Architects Callister & Rosse's respect for the site, the materials—and the children.

Quality on a budget 120

Although they do not look it, these two Michigan schools by Architects Vander Meiden & Koteles averaged only $8.64 a sq. ft.

New ways to cut costs 125

A new study by the Ford Foundation's Educational Facilities Laboratories shows how to save on the 15 key parts of the typical school.

Colleges for the community 132

The boom in junior colleges has wrought many changes in education, as seen in West Coast Architect Ernest Kump's prototypical Foothill College.

ART OF ARCHITECTURE

Yamasaki's ode to aluminum 140

Reynolds' new regional office sells aluminum on a Detroit expressway.

Wizard of the shells 154

Felix Candela has probably exerted more influence on thin-shell concrete architecture than any one else—a gallery of three recent Candela churches.

CITIES

Landscapes between walls 148

Landscape Architect Lawrence Halprin warns that the problems of renewing nature in the midst of urban bareness must be approached with care.

The businessman's stake in renewal 146

In a business sense, cities are not only markets but are also working capital—and the rebuilding they need is a replenishment of that capital.

TECHNOLOGY

A gun for thin shells 160

Contractor Max True's new spray gun opens the way for thin-shell concrete structures whose cost might have been prohibitive if built conventionally.

Lightweight colossus 162

Eastern's Idlewild terminal is 18 million pounds lighter than it looks.
