SCHOOLS

What's changing U.S. high schools? 94

National stereotypes are dissolving as different local challenges form peculiar kinds of schools. Four examples that illustrate the trend:

Wayland's lab for learning 96

In college-minded Massachusetts, an unusual plan fosters a college-like approach.

Columbus' try for architecture 102

Formidable in mass, a big brick building in Indiana bucks the modern style.

Stillwater's plant for teaching 105

An "inside," loft-plan school in Oklahoma, packed with surprise—and quality.

Chicago's program for improvement 110

The city runs a building program huge in size, human in scale, low in cost.

ART OF ARCHITECTURE

Union Carbide's shaft of steel 114

A worthy newcomer to the parade up Manhattan's Park Avenue, Union Carbide embodies the latest trends in urban design, office planning, and economics.

Rare building for rare books 138

Yale's new library will have four giant trusses for facades, a glass vault within.

BUSINESS OF BUILDING

New hotel vs. old code 122

Hilton and his architect are going to court rather than let code officials design their San Francisco hotel. Meanwhile, other cities modernize their codes.

CITIES

Brasilia: a new type of national city 125

Now in use, Brazil's fast-built and spirited new capital shows some revolutionary concepts and a few shortcomings—a criticism.

Romance in the park 134

In the heart of New York's Central Park, the water terrace designed by Olmstead & Vaux bespeaks the elegance of another century—a Gallery.

TECHNOLOGY

A great balloon for peaceful atoms 142

Architect Victor Lundy shapes an air-supported sculpture for the A.E.C.

Technical briefs 146

A prefabricated school . . . plastics in building . . . the preflexing technique.
