ART OF ARCHITECTURE

Boston bucks the trend 64

While other office buildings vie for slickness, the new Blue Cross headquarters by Architect Paul Rudolph wears a rich basket weave of precast concrete.

An uncommon college commons 77

The glassy social hall for Lake Erie College reflects the collaboration of a gifted architect, a demanding client, and a compliant federal official.

The perfect professional museum 90

Designed by an erstwhile museum director, Philip Johnson, sumptuous art institute in Utica, N. Y., is a blunt windowless box hung from four great girders.

John Warnecke's humanist architecture 96

This Californian's practice is growing and his buildings are getting bigger, but he continues to achieve intimate scale and a sense of shelter.

Toying with architecture 106

Construction kits for Christmas make fun out of building designs—a gallery.

BUSINESS OF BUILDING

A spur to real estate investment 70

More money for building construction is promised by the Congressional approval last summer of "conduit" tax treatment for real estate trusts.

A new housing market: older people 110

The aged constitute a big market, but they will remain unsold until the industry tailors some of its production to this market's very special needs.

CITIES

Hartford: renewal in the round 72

Spurred by energetic businessmen, Connecticut's capital is launched on a remarkably well-balanced redevelopment program. A case study for cities large and small.

TECHNOLOGY

The concrete bird stands free 114

The formwork is stripped from Eero Saarinen's great shell for TWA at Idlewild.

Technical briefs 116

Crackless plaster . . . . Formless concrete . . . . Curtain-thin marble.
