Recent advances in design and technical refinements have revealed new potentials for steel as a tectonic material. This is the theme of this special technical issue of P/A, which includes articles that discuss: the properties of the newest steels; the impact of industrialization on building technology; the increased interest in tubular construction, documented by discussion of three remarkable new structures; new applications of stainless steel; a run-down on steel furniture, with specifications data; and the application of the suspension principle to buildings made possible by the refinement of high-strength steels.
