274 The violent consumer

... or waiting for the goodies. 'The swings of fashion of inhabiting cities', says Alison Smithson, 'might be demonstrated by a plotted survey of habitats of London criminals. Some of these habitats, 100 years later, in the 1970's, are the most desirable of bijou dwellings. With its colourful stress on criminality, the same map could be used to show that anti-social behaviour could not be blamed on lack of social structure... for the housing mass on the map is made up of clear cluster patterns growing initially out of land ownership and continuing as close-knit communities'.
