397 Summaries/French

399 Romantasy

Arthur Quarmby has coined the word 'romantasy' to mean an expression of environmental pleasure and an understanding and humane use of the vernacular – a reaction against the often coolly depressive inhibitions of 'modern architecture'.

401 Alternative Technology

Excerpts from David Dickson's paperback recently published by Fontana.

403 Collective design: reappraisal of concepts in urbanism

The fourth in this series of articles by Peter and Alison Smithson. Previous ones have appeared in AD 10/73, AD 5/74 and AD 6/74.

408 Ishish settlements of construction workers in Kuwait.

Karim Jamal discusses the parlous living conditions of immigrant labour (57% of the country's population).

414 Map guide to London markets

Prepared by students at the School of Environmental Design, University College, London, under the guidance of Barbara Goldstein.

416 Hangar home

Dr Dexler will park his plane inside the house which Brand Griffin has designed for him in Texas.

418 Briefing: libraries

In a large and complex library building, the sets of overlapping requirements for different functional elements demand the creation of an intelligible order to cope with them – an order which must satisfy the needs of spatial intelligibility, and provide for functional effectiveness over a long period of time.

Miss M. J. Long and Peter Carolin (of Colin St John Wilson & Partners) distinguish the three principal functional elements in any library areas for reading, book storage and staff work – and the relationship of requirements within and between these – that must be used to produce the order, and ultimately the system of building, appropriate to each library brief.

426 City map guide No 23: Los Angeles

Esther McCoy and Robert Winter have made the selection of 20th Century buildings.

432 Towards a poor world. Or how scarcity might prevent the catastrophe

Yona Friedman proves the impossibility of global communication.

446 Energetics of the built environment

Ken Yeang examines the cycle of use of the built environment, and discusses its energy equivalents and costs.
