ART OF ARCHITECTURE

The contribution of Le Corbusier 81

A 23-page review of the recent work of the man who this month will receive the Gold Medal of the American Institute of Architects—plus a discussion of the three basic objectives which his work pursues: new forms and spaces, a new kind of city, and a new system of proportions.

Portland's great hall of glass 106

The ambivalent Coliseum by Skidmore, Owings & Merrill may have been distorted in execution, but this does not ruin its gift of soaring, luminous space—a criticism.

Child-size school 114

Mario Ciampi's prize winner in Daly City, Calif. is scaled to the people who use it.

Noteworthy buildings 118

A refreshing oasis amid the showrooms of a Texas trade mart. . . . A compound for atoms on the coast of Israel. . . . a warehouse of great elegance on a Miami highway.

BUSINESS OF BUILDING

Building resumes its upward trend 104

A revision of FORUM's 1961 forecast finds building construction on the upgrade.

Building's No. 1 contractor 112

Behind the growth of George A. Fuller Co. is a smooth kind of selling, an uncanny sense of cost, and a close liaison with clients, architects, and subcontractors.

TECHNOLOGY

Aviation eyes the building industry 122

Much that has been learned in making air frames could be used in construction.

REBUILDING

A department store reborn 126

Within a 1912 shell, Architects Ketchum & Sharp have given May-Cohen in Jacksonville 50 per cent more space for the "forward content" of visible merchandise.

Two case studies 130

An old loft in San Francisco provides handsome office space at $3 a foot. . . . A factory in downtown Philadelphia makes way for a new kind of hospital.

Roundup 133

Public housing rebuilt for use as private apartments. . . . Three ways to spur FHA-financed rebuilding. . . . Cooling comes to 13,000 stores, the Alamo, and a harem.
