ARCHITECTURAL BUSINESS

57 Office management

Continuing education as a requirement for recertification takes hold in California

A bill in the legislature could be law by 1979.

59 Legal perspectives

The debate over consolidation of arbitration proceedings is enlivened by a recent New York case

A common question arising from arbitration is whether multi-party disputes may be consolidated in one proceeding.

61 Building financing

REITS begin the gradual process of regaining some of their former status in funding development

Although still weak, the Real Estate Investment Trusts are trying for a comeback.

63 Building costs

Construction costs are still rising at 10 per cent per year.

FEATURES

81 An arresting view to the south

Two new buildings by the Mexico City firm of Teodoro Gonzalez de Leon and Abraham Zabłudobsky.

89 To surreal with love

Stanley Tigerman's designs for two houses near Chicago explore the psychological signals and cultural clues within architecture's primal building materials—the nature of human nature, and of human history.

95 Webster Avenue Youth Center by Smotrich and Platt

A long-delayed youth center in the Bronx lives up to community hopes and adds urgently needed recreation spaces to a neighborhood where amenities are all too few.

99 The Malls at Water Tower Place Chicago, Illinois

Warren Platner Associates, Architects
What began a few years ago as a problem in commercial retailing with obvious and hard-to-overcome difficulties has recently resulted in a bang-up popular success on Chicago's Michigan Avenue, a crowd-pleaser that promises merchants happy returns.

105 A visitors' center for an historic house

With the growing interest in historic sites, the appropriate ancillary facilities for tourists gain new importance. Such a facility for Gunston Hall in Virginia illustrates one approach by architects Philip Ives Associates.

ARCHITECTURAL ENGINEERING

125 Designing brick masonry walls to avoid structural problems

Because of the greater frequency of failures these days, engineer Clayford Grimm recommends more conservative values for masonry expansion, and suggests a number of design practices that can prevent buckling and cracking of brick when used in conjunction with other structural components.

NEXT MONTH IN RECORD

Building Types Study:

College buildings

As building proceeds on many campuses around the country, there has been an increased need to meet new challenges that educational institutions have encountered. Included in next month's study is a set of such noteworthy buildings that not only intelligently answer demanding energy-conscious requirements but have provided the inspirational setting that students are demanding of their educational institutions.
