OVERVIEW

I am currently Associate Professor of Economic Policy at the University of Trento, Department of Sociology and Social Research, where I teach entrepreneurship and administration of third sector organisations (PG), as well as economic policy (UG), and two seminars with teaching credits attached on topics related to dissertation writing. I am the academic coordinator of seminars on university inclusion services, stakeholder engagement in health programmes, of political economy in the Euro area. Within my Department I contribute to administrative activities through collegial activities in post-graduate and under graduate programmes, including the doctoral school. I am also in charge of the inclusion (former disability) services for the Department students (UG and PG).

Outside the University, I am scientific coordinator of the research area on Governance at the research center Euricse, which supports sectorial research within the same research center (i.e. on community enterprises, on work integration enterprises, on cultural organisations). The work carried out in recent years, which informs also my teaching, has developed conceptual and methodological tools for the study of economic coordination among stakeholders, as well as the ethical value of governance with respect to the results produced for stakeholders and communities.

Earlier, I have worked in other UK Universities: as Senior Lecturer at the Department of Public Leadership and Social Enterprise of The Open University (2014-2017), at the University of Stirling (Management School, 2009-2014 as permanent Lecturer), and at the University of Birmingham (Business School, 2006-2009, as permanent Lecturer). My academic experience in Italy goes back to my earlier career, when I have worked at the Universities of Bologna (Faculty of Political Science, 1996-97, short-term research contract), Ferrara (with research and teaching contracts at the Faculty of Economics and then Engineering, 1998-05), and Trento (Faculty of Economics, 2007, teaching contract). I have taken two periods of maternity leaves, in 2002 and 2005.

My past teaching at the Open University includes three courses on Innovation and Entrepreneurship (one for MBAs, one for second year UG students, one for third year UG students) and, until 2015, "Organisations and their Environment". The MBA course and the course on Organisations have been taught "in presentation," meaning that I have been part of the central academic team that coordinates and informs a team of associate lecturers who deliver an established course. UG courses on Entrepreneurship and Innovation are instead being taught "in production," meaning that I have been or I am part of the team that produces the new course and its teaching materials.

In my previous academic appointments I have also taught a variety of courses, including topics on Globalisation, Socio-Economic Development, Industrial Development Models, Third Sector Organisations, Business Ethics, International Business, Knowledge, Innovation and Regional Development, Industrial Organisation, Research Methods. At Stirling, between 2009 and 2014, I have introduced and directed two MSc programmes (International Business and Socio-Economic Development; HRM and Socio-Economic Development). I have also contributed to redesign and direct for two years (2010-12) the Stirling MBA programme around issues of Social Responsibility and UN Prme (Principles for Responsible Management Education).

My current research addresses the governance and networking of organisations that produce meritorious goods, within two sectors in particular: the cultural sector and in particular music schools and musicians and their implications for communities and stakeholders; work integration social enterprises and their implications for communities and stakeholders. In 2020 I was granted Euros 50,000 by the bank foundation Fondazione Caritro to start a research project on music schools, their networks and local development (start December 2020 for two years) to take extant research further. In 2015 I was granted internal but competitive OU funds on social enterprise governance. This internally funded preliminary research has developed into a successful Leverhulme Research Grant (£10,000) awarded by the British Academy to address work integration social enterprises.

My early research has been concerned with the limits of corporate hierarchies, and especially with the development implications of concentration of decision-making power in production governance in terms of uneven development amongst people and localities. Starting from critical literature, I have studied production governance solutions for the development of inclusive economies and localities, and for building inclusive relations amongst communities of interest at all societal levels. Specifically, earlier research has focused on the study of small and medium enterprises (SMEs), their networks and clusters as industrial development models.

Over the past 5 years specific research lines have addressed:

- a) The implications of different governance forms and policy choices for socio-economic development, focusing on:
 - The governance and networking of cooperatives and social enterprises
 - The features of multi-actor governance with applications to social enterprises and welfare services
 - Social capital, and particularly cooperation leading to the rise of networks of social enterprises in Scotland for the promotion of public interest, with applications to welfare services and to bioreserves.
 - Inclusive and exclusive preferences underpinning different business models and their impacts over the public interest.
 - Inclusive and exclusive preferences underpinning different spatial policies and their impacts over the public interest.
- b) Creativity and its context: implications for individual satisfaction and motivations, focusing on the analysis of worker microdata concerning individual wellbeing in the organizations of the social economy. Specifically I have focused on:
 - The relation between organisational dimensions (such as membership, perceived fairness and autonomy; involvement, teamwork, training and learning), individual motivations and aspects of individual satisfaction
 - The resilience of individual motivations within complex systems (i.e. social enterprise; universities)

Through these streams, my current aim is to build a body of literature that contributes to explain the implications that taking a cooperative and inclusive approach to business and policy can have in terms of development model. I am currently applying this body of work to the study of production governance of health and personal services, as well as in cultural organisations.

The main academic networks which provide support and peer review to my research are in the areas of cooperative firms, social enterprises, socio-economics, local development, organization theory, and industrial development policy. In particular, the EMES Network (social enterprise research network); ICA International Cooperative Alliance, the Association for Socio Economics (ASE), the IPPE (International Initiative for the Promotion of Political Economy); the International Confederation of Associations for Pluralism in Economics (ICAPE), the Academy of Management (AoM), the EAEPE European Association for Evolutionary Political Economy, IAFEP International Association for the Economics of Participation, SASE Society for Advancement in Socio-Economics, SIE Società Italiana degli Economisti, EUNIP (European Network for Industrial Policy).

Following research activity, I have been visiting professor at the University of Modena-Reggio Emilia, Faculty of Economics and Communication (2013). I was coordinator an inter-faculty work group on “collaborative governance” at my University, as one of the Open University Strategic Research Areas (SRAs). Externally, I am co-chief editor of JEOD (Journal of Entrepreneurial and Organizational Diversity, published by Euricse, European Research Institute on Cooperatives and Social Enterprises, Trento, Italy), where I also coordinate the research area on Governance, funded by the Trentino Province.

My external academic activities include stable collaborations (as in developing research and research bid proposals) with:

- a) Euricse, where collaborations have focused on positioning cooperatives and social enterprises into wider evolutionary scenarios for the development of communities. At Euricse I am coordinator of the “governance” research group and Co-chief Editor of JEOD (Journal of Entrepreneurial and Organizational Diversity).
- b) University of British Columbia, Management School, Canada, where I have visited in 2019 and in 2018. Together we have developed a cluster that focuses on the study of music schools and their publics, and more generally with engaging publics in socio-economic activities in non-metropolitan regions, and including non-academic partners with whom faculty have worked with over years.
- c) Centre for the Study of Co-operatives, University of Saskatchewan, Canada, where I have been visiting in September 2015 with the aim of developing a common research network and agenda across the OU, Euricse, and the Centre for the Study of Co-operatives.
- d) Assist Social Capital and Creative Stirling (both are community interest companies, CIC, located in Scotland). These are collaborations that begun when I was at Stirling University and that has greatly enriched the contents of my post-graduate teaching and practice-based research on social enterprises and social capital. The study and promotion of the complementarities between social enterprises and social capital is particularly relevant to the approach taken, and contributes to the current policy debate, as well as to the creation of new interpretations of the role of governance for social inclusion. The collaboration has generated joint research publications and applications on asset-based community welfare and on a UNESCO funded project on biosphere reserves coordinated by Assist Social Capital.

EXTERNAL ENGAGEMENT WITH COMMUNITIES

During my career external engagement has occurred in diverse ways, also by designing and fundraising for projects aimed at promoting local development initiatives, building networks of local administrations and other community stakeholders. In 2007 I have co-organised the establishment of the "First Biannual International Festival on Creativity and Economic Development" May 2007 (Gambettola, Italy), raising 40,000 Euros and sponsorships in kind (with R Sugden and M Valania). Following the Festival event, I co-organised a Knowledge transfer forum: "The Birmingham Creativity Forum: A City-University Forum on Creativity, Innovation and Culture in the Development of Economies" at the Birmingham Business School, February 2008 (with R Sugden and M Valania) and in 2009 the Second Biannual Festival on Creativity and Economic Development on "Recapturing Space and Time. The Role of Creativity in Local Economic Development", raising 8,000 Euros and sponsorships in kind (Gambettola, Italy). In 2013 I have been involved in the setting of a Public Community Forum in a small Italian town, aimed at considering the role of third sector organisations in the requalification of privately-owned, abandoned buildings that occupy a central position inside towns and that could represent an important long-term development opportunity for communities.

More specific activities involved:

- Third Sector Engagement breakfast event at The Open University, Milton Keynes (UK), March 2015, Poster presentation. Third sector participants and faculty joined in view of discussing research results and needs from the sector.
- Creative space. Promoting engagement between universities and communities on cultural events, 2009-12, University of Stirling.
This project involved a coordinated set of activities to foster interaction between academia and the wider society. The project created a stage for engagement, with the broad aim of contributing to stimulate creativity and critical thinking in everyday life. In doing this, it crucially recognised the role of the arts, nature, and learning. The project included a series of cultural activities organised by the Stirling Management School and the University Art Collection at the University of Stirling in collaboration with a number of partners embedded in the community: Forth Valley College, Macrobart Art Centre, Toolbooth, members of the Falkirk Council. Part of the project has been dedicated to designing a mixed methodology for studying the impact of thematic talks, seminars and artistic events and related activities on socioeconomic development. The evaluation of impacts covers non-material aspects of participation in events. Further research design has addressed the values and work attitudes of Forth Valley College students in the creative industries.

- Knowledge Transfer Partnership between University of Stirling and Macrobert Arts Centre ltd (Scientific supervision of KTP associate 2010-12), University of Stirling. The KTP between macrobert and the University of Stirling aimed at developing an evaluation framework and relevant methodologies that will enable the company to determine and demonstrate the socio-economic impacts of its creative activities to funders, policy agencies, key collaborators and other publics.
- The Birmingham Creativity Forum: A City-University Forum on Creativity, Innovation and Culture in the Development of Economies” at the Birmingham Business School, February 2008 (with R Sugden and M Valania). University of Birmingham.
- "First Biannual International Festival on Creativity and Economic Development" May 2007, University of Birmingham and Comune di Gambettola, Italy. The initiative supported by a partnership that includes the Birmingham Business School, various business firms and municipalities, Comune di Gambettola, the Emilia-Romagna Region, the Province of Forli-Cesena, and with the High Patronage of the Italian Republic. External funding: Euros 40,000 and sponsorships in kind.
- Second Biannual Festival on Creativity and Economic Development on "Recapturing Space and Time. The Role of Creativity in Local Economic Development" April 2009. University of Birmingham and Comune di Gambettola, Italy. An initiative supported by a partnership that includes the Institute for Economic Development Policy (University of Birmingham, UK), Stirling Management School (University of Stirling, UK), Antares (Faculty of Political Science, University of Bologna-Forli', Italy), Faculty of Architecture "A. Rossi" (University of Bologna-Cesena, Italy) and the institutional backing of Comune di Gambettola, Province of Forli-Cesena, Regione Emilia-Romagna. External funding: Euros 8,000 and sponsorships in kind.
- Chair and Founding Member of the Coordination Team of Interactus, 2007-2012. Interactus was a non-profit enterprise established in Italy. It was designed as a community network focused on economic development, creativity, critical thinking, art and democracy. It was a vehicle for organising and managing aspects of the International Festival of Creativity and Economic Development, being hosted for the first time in May 2007 in Gambettola (Italy) and in 2009.

DIRECTION OR PARTICIPATION IN RESEARCH GROUPS WITH NATIONAL OR INTERNATIONAL COLLABORATIONS

Recent project applications as research coordinator:

- Fondazione Caritro, Bando per progetti di ricerca su tematiche umanistiche e sociali. Principal investigator. Project Title: Il sistema di istruzione musicale in Provincia di Trento. Sviluppare spazi creativi per le scuole, le comunità e i musicisti attraverso le collaborazioni ed il networking. Duration: 2 years. External funds: 50,000 Euros. Total budget: Euros 69.481. Partners: University of British Columbia, Canada; University of St Andrews, Scotland; Euricse (Italy); Department of Humanities, Trento, Submitted 4 June 2020, awarded. Start December 2020.

Project summary: The project wants to lay stable foundations for the study of the music schools system in Trentino through the analysis of formal and informal collaborations and networks that relates private music schools, public actors (provinces and municipalities), public training institutes (conservatory, music high schools, compulsory schools, social and health services), private companies in the music industry, in the culture, in commerce and leisure industries, foundations and other nonprofit actors.

Specifically, the project examines the nature of the activities of the music schools in Trentino and their ability to generate value (artistic, educational, social and economic) in a context where organizations, musicians, students, and the whole community faces important challenges (also following the global health contingency). It also delves into the erosion of the vitality of the music system and of the community. The idea is to map a potentially multicentric system where diversity and complementarities between organizations and skills can activate unexplored resources and dynamics of community empowerment development, affecting the vitality of people and organizations (private and public).

The vitality concept, which is opposed to that of inertia or lock-in, is articulated on the basis of two main indicators concerning the inclusiveness and participation level of stakeholders and the consequent ability of the system to activate the creative and innovative potential of participants (known to be related to their satisfaction and well-being). The project legacy is about identifying and developing a new method to appreciate and evaluate the characteristics (to the advantage and disadvantage) of music education sector and its potential ability to generate greater vitality and people's well-being.

- SCIENTIFIC LEAD OF THE RESEARCH AREA ON GOVERNANCE. This research area is part of the programme funded by the Trentino Province at EURICSE, since 2017.
- Bando Prin 2017, National Research Interest Project (PRIN), Ministry of University and Scientific Research, Italy. Project Title: New Forms of Business Governance for Economic Democracy and the General Interest. Responsabile di Unità di Ricerca, Department of Sociology and Social Research, University of Trento. Project Coordinator: Anna Grandori (Bocconi University). Not funded.

Research Project Abstract: This project pools interdisciplinary competences in organization and management, and in law and economics for delivering a systematic review and comparative assessment of existing and possible firm governance configurations economic democracy and the general interest. Among the deliverables there are: a state of art of new conceptual approaches to the firm in organization, law and economics; a wide (about 5000 records) data base on governance structures encompassing corporate forms (as Spa and Srl), cooperative forms, and social enterprises; a review of those legal forms of enterprise and of their properties for democracy and the general interest, also from a comparative law perspective; a typology of forms of business governance, as combinations of structural components and practices, conducive to comparative assessment and organizational design; quantitative analyses of the effects of different configurations on a wide set of performance parameters such as efficiency, growth, externalities and general interest, innovation, and human capital development; discrete choice experiments for exploring possible improvements; in depth case studies of firm governance structures found to rank higher in democracy and general interest.

- British Academy/Leverhulme Small Research Grants - SRG 2015 Round (£10,000). Project reference nr. SG150560. Title of project: “The “innovative social enterprise”. Reaching sustainability and continuity in the provision of health related services” May 2015. Awarded (Duration: 2 years, September 2015-August 2017).
Research Project Abstract: In European regions the health sector is facing increasing difficulties. The demand and complexity of the services is growing and resources are shrinking. SEs have long been considered an innovative way to respond to these challenges, but there has been less attention paid to whether and how their governance arrangements contribute to service innovation and to their longer-term sustainability. Specifically, because of the multiplicity of the interests involved, governance solutions that favour the inclusion of stakeholders are advocated by SE legal frameworks across Europe. The modalities of stakeholders’ participation and its effects have not been fully researched to date. We build on debate on organisational innovation and stakeholder participation, and factor in the relevance of social costs, which particular governance and organisational structures can be able to internalize. Making use of case study analysis, the research adds to extant literature by considering solutions that support the development of SE to the benefit of stakeholders and society more broadly.

1. Mini-bid grant (£ 3500) awarded by: Collaborative Governance Strategic Research Area in Citizenship and Governance at the Open University. Title of the project: A literature review and comparative analysis of social enterprise governance models: The case of Colombia. Supervising 1 research assistant. (March 2016-July 2016).

Research Project Abstract: The aim of the small project is to review literature on models of social enterprise, in order to highlight the most relevant and innovative institutional architectures for adequately exploiting and channelling citizens’ ability to solve key communities and societal problems. The review does so by comparing findings in the literature on the European model and findings in the literature on the solutions that are emerging in so-called South-of-the-world countries, focusing on Latin America. To fully harness the contribution of social enterprises to societal wellbeing, inclusion and prosperity, their rationale and roles need to be better understood and subsequently translated into effective policies that are able to exploit their competitive advantages vis-à-vis public and for-profit enterprises.

2. Seedcorn Funding at the Open University (£2500): Assessing Governance Models of Healthcare Social Enterprises. Hosting institution: Euricse, Trento (Italy). Awarded (December 2014-July 2015).

Research Project Abstract: Social enterprises have seen a consistent growth in Europe and elsewhere over the last decade. Specifically for the provision of healthcare and welfare services social enterprises have flanked the public sector, developing innovative responses to particular welfare needs. Still the question remains on whether health and welfare services can be provided by social enterprises consistently with the interests of the disadvantaged groups and with the public interest more broadly (Borzaga and Fazzi, 2014). In answering this question, the social enterprise governance can provide relevant indications on the effectiveness of outcomes (i.e. in terms of quality and innovativeness) and nature of impacts. In passing, this is one instance of a wider gap – the need to shift social enterprise research from the level of the firm to the level of the system, and system governance. The analysis is expected to identify typologies of social enterprises on the basis of their approach to inclusion of multiple needs by looking at: production organisation (who contributes to produce social value along the value chain); governance (with specific attention to the degree of multiple stakeholder ownership); surplus distribution (across potentially conflicting interests); outcomes (quality of services, innovation); and impacts (e.g. welfare of users and communities). Methodology: conceptual framework development; analysis of existing data set; case study analysis.
